Fund Commentary¹

As of September 30, 2017

Stocks had robust gains, helped by a synchronized global recovery and strong second-quarter corporate results. Returns in U.S. dollar terms were boosted by strength in the euro, sterling and Canadian dollar. Companies within the diversified portfolio continued to grow free cash flow and remained committed to consistently returning cash to shareholders through a combination of cash dividends, share buybacks and debt reduction.

Relative to the index, the portfolio's underperformance was due a larger weight in the consumer staples and utilities sectors, which lagged the market as investors favored more economically sensitive stocks. At the same time, the portfolio had a smaller weight than the index in the information technology sector, in which paying dividends tends to be less of a priority. The technology sector, however, was among the best performing for the period.

Within consumer staples, the portfolio's holdings in tobacco companies also dampened relative returns. On a positive note, industrials and financials were among the largest positive contributors to relative results stemming from stock selection within both sectors.

We believe the broad implementation of technological advances will continue to suppress wage growth and dampen inflationary pressures. It is crucial to keep in mind that disruptive innovation will affect all economic sectors, not just information technology. As a result, we believe it is ever more important to favor companies with demonstrated abilities to produce free cash flow and allocate it wisely between options for returning capital and opportunities for reinvestment and acquisitions.

Investment Risks

In addition to the normal risks associated with investing, international investments may involve risk of capital loss from unfavorable fluctuation in currency values, from differences in generally accepted accounting principles or from social, economic or political instability in other nations. Emerging markets involve heightened risks related to the same factors as well as increased volatility and lower trading volume. Investments in midsize and smaller companies typically exhibit higher volatility. Income-producing common stocks that meet the Fund's investment criteria may not be widely available and/or may be concentrated in one or a few regions or sectors, which may impact the Fund's ability to produce current income while remaining diversified. Bonds are subject to interest rate risk and will decline in value as interest rates rise. Not FDIC Insured • May Lose Value • No Bank Guarantee.
