Fund Commentary¹

Strong gains in January and February resulted in stocks ending the quarter sharply higher. The upturn was driven by stronger macroeconomic data, an improved outlook for earnings, and policy expectations for the Trump administration (primarily tax cuts, deregulation, and infrastructure spending).

The portfolio posted positive results as market momentum from the second half of last year continued into the first quarter. Companies within the diversified portfolio continued to grow free cash flow and remained committed to consistently returning cash to shareholders through a combination of cash dividends, share buybacks and debt reduction.

On a relative basis, the portfolio meaningfully outperformed the broader market. Energy, stemming from both stock selection and a meaningful underweight, was the largest contributor to relative returns. Consumer staples, stemming mainly from our tobacco exposure, also contributed to relative performance. Stock selection and an underweight position in financials further boosted relative results, as the financials sector lagged after several months of outperforming on the back of higher yields and the promise of less regulation. In particular, strong returns from our insurance holdings and a lower exposure to banks proved beneficial.

Stock selection and an underweight position in health care, which was one of the best-performing sectors of the market, detracted from relative performance. Stock selection within technology also hindered relative performance. However, much of this negative impact was offset by an overweight position in the sector, which was the best-performing sector of the market.

Investment Risks

In addition to the normal risks associated with investing, international investments may involve risk of capital loss from unfavorable fluctuation in currency values, from differences in generally accepted accounting principals or from social, economic or political instability in other nations. Investments in mid-size and smaller companies typically exhibit higher volatility. Income-producing common stocks that meet the Fund's investment criteria may not be widely available and/or may be concentrated in one or a few regions or sectors, which may impact the Fund's ability to produce current income while remaining diversified. Bonds are subject to interest rate risk and will decline in value as interest rates rise. Not FDIC Insured • May Lose Value • No Bank Guarantee.
